The secular parish of Stowe by Chartley includes Amerton, Chartley, Drinton and Grindley as well as parts of Gayton, Gratwich, Leafields and Lea Road. Locals refer to the main village as 'Stowe'.

The area has a long and interesting history with many historical sites especially in the Chartley area. The most obvious is the medieval Chartley Castle.

In the eighteenth and nineteenth century salt was extracted at Shirleywich, just across the boundary, and gypsum was mined at Normanswood Farm.

The old 'clog and knocker' railway line once ran through the parish from Stafford to Uttoxeter. The track can still be seen. There was a station next to the village hall and another at Grindley. The station house is now a private dwelling and the old station itself resurrected on the narrow gauge railway at Stafford, Rugeley and Uttoxeter. There are bus services to Stafford and Uttoxeter.

In 1941 a large tract of farmland to the southwest of Stowe was chosen as the site for an RAF training base. Many features of the airfield can still be seen and footpaths lead on to the site from Stowe Lane, Bridge Lane and Amerton Lane. Walk leaflets are available from The Cock or from the clerk to the council.

There is no school in Stowe now but the houses in Station Road named 'Old School House' and 'Schoolyard House' show where it was. The playing field was once part of the school grounds.
