The secular parish of Stowe by Chartley includes Amerton, Chartley, Drinton, and Grindley as well as parts of Gayton, Gratwich, Leafields and Lea Heath. Locals refer to the main village as 'Stowe'. The area has a long and interesting history with many historical sites, especially in the Chartley area. The most obvious is the medieval Chartley Castle. In the eighteenth and nineteenth century salt was extracted at Shirleywich, just outside the boundary and gypsum was mined at Normanswood Farm. The old 'Clog and Knocker' railway line once ran through the parish on the way from Stafford to Uttoxeter. The track can still be seen. There was a station next to the village hall and another at Grindley. The station house is now a private dwelling and the old station itself is resurrected on the narrow gauge railway at Amerton Farm. Today the nearest stations are at Stafford, Uttoxeter and Rugeley. There is a bus service from Stafford to Uttoxeter via Great Haywood, Hixon and Stowe.

In 1941 a large tract of farmland to the southwest of Stowe was chosen as the site for an RAF training base. Many features of the airfield can still be seen and footpaths lead on to the site from Stowe Lane, Bridge Lane and Amerton Lane. Walk leaflets are available from the Cock Inn, the Book Exchange (ex-telephone box) and web site.

There is no school in Stowe now but the houses in Station Road named 'Old School House' and 'Schoolyard House' show where it was. The playing field was once part of the school grounds.

Opposite the C15 Cock Inn in the centre of the village is St. John the Baptist church, built in the mid C12 by the Earl of Chester. Bits have been added over the years and it was comprehensively restored in 1866..
